Coach Your Child to Become Socially Engaged and Confident

Being good with people is a critical human development skill

"Thoughtful, compassionate primer to helping children overcome social challenges."
—Publishers Weekly

Why Will No One Play With Me? includes foolproof scripts on how to communicate with your child - in any situation - and how to ensure the message registers. No small task! The curriculum will teach you the essential tools I've learned from more than a decade of assisting children of all ages, learning challenges and emotional IQs to recognize social clues and build lasting friendships. You will learn exactly how to guide your child to better understand their social world and move forward in loving and adaptive ways.

Why Will No One Play with Me? Highlights

Part 1: Get Kids on Board. The Coach-Approach to Communicating Effectively

Do you wonder how to talk about social skills with your child? Do you struggle with how to broach tough topics? Does your child resist talking about friendship? Learn how to take a coach-approach to truly hear your child's perspective and get her to open up. Learn how to collaborate, listen and pave the way to any conversation with a child of any age.

Formula for Moving from Small Talk to Conversations

Part 2: The Coach's Playbook: Coaching Guides, Questionnaires, Tools

Parenting is so much easier with a play book. To truly become your child's ally, discover what social skills coaching actually looks like. Implement the professionals' perspectives and tools, including the 7 essential social behaviors everyone needs, into daily life. All scripts focus on how to ensure your messaging registers with your child.

Part 3: How to Recognize and Evaluate Change

Learn how to approach social skill building using the interactive conversation guide; what to pay attention to; how to observe your child and recognize signs and signals of change; why parents need to pause and notice as change may be small.

Part 4: The Play Better Plan: To Playdates and Beyond

Choose a lesson such as Social Spy; Learning to Walk; Who Is Your Audience or Emotional Volcano. Role play coaching. Assign the child a specific mission for the play date. Review completed Play Date Planning Check list. Play Date Planning Cheat Sheet. Write and review the situations with the most impact on play dates, what lesson track are they doing first? What lesson do they need to do to practice that skill ahead of time? How to get playdates or friends to hang out with to practice emerging skills. Importance of play and practice and how to facilitate this learning. Encouraging independence; Troubleshooting; Debriefing checklist.

Building Strong Social, Emotional and Behavioral Skills is My Mission

Let's help your child become her best self: socially engaged, confident, and open to the unlimited world of learning, connection and life.

"As a parent, I have learned that you have to continually follow through with what you and your child learn through coaching. It is a process that, given time, patience and effort will be worth it both for your child's social skills and for your parent-child relationship." — Jennifer, Mother
